

Brain On Fire My Month Of Madness By Susannah Cahalan

"Pressestimmen â€œCaptivatingâ€ Cahalanâ€™s prose carries a sharp, unsparing tabloid punch in the tradition of Pete Hamill and Jimmy Breslin.â€ (New York Times Book Review)â€œA fascinating look at the disease that â€œ if not for a nick-of-time diagnosis â€œ could have cost this vibrant, vital young woman her life.â€ (People magazine)â€œThe bizarre and confounding illness that beset the 24-year-old New York Post reporter in early 2009 so ravaged her mentally and physically that she became unrecognizable to coworkers, family, friends, andâ€most devastatinglyâ€herselfâ€ She dedicates this miracle of a book to â€œthose without a diagnosisâ€ [An] unforgettable memoir.â€ (Elle)â€œSwift and haunting.â€ (Scientific American)â€œThis fascinating memoir by a young New York Post reporterâ€describes how she crossed the line between sanity and insanityâ€Cahalan expertly weaves together her own story and relevant scientific informationâ€compelling.â€ (Booklist (starred review))'An intense, mesmerizing account of survival. . . Cahalan's deft descriptions of her spooky hallucinations could be right out of a Poe terror tale.' (BookForum)â€œFor the neurologist, I highly recommend this book on several groundsâ€First, it is a well-told story, worth reading for the suspense and the dramatic cadence of eventsâ€Second, it is a superb case study of a rare neurologic diagnosis; even experienced neurologists will find much to learn in itâ€Third, and most important, it gives the neurologist insight into how a patient and her family experienced a complex illness, including the terrifying symptoms, the difficult pace of medical diagnosis, and the slow recovery. This story clearly contains lessons for all of us.â€ (Cognitive and Behavioral Neurology)â€œFocusing her journalistic toolbox on her story, Cahalan untangles the medical mystery surrounding her conditionâ€A fast-paced and well-researched trek through a medical mystery to a hard-won recovery.â€ (Publishers Weekly)'The best reporters never stop asking questions, and Cahalan is no exception...The result is a kind of anti-memoir, an out-of-body personal account of a young woman's fight to survive one of the cruelest diseases imaginable. And on every level, it's remarkable.....Cahalan is nothing if not tenacious, and she perfectly tempers her brutal honesty with compassion and something like vulnerability. It's indisputable that Cahalan is a gifted reporter, and Brain on Fire is a stunningly brave book. But even more than that, she's a naturally talented prose stylist â€œ whip-smart but always unpretentious â€œ and it's nearly impossible to stop reading her, even in the book's most painful passages....Brain on Fire comes from a place of intense pain and unthinkable isolation, but finds redemption in Cahalan's unflagging, defiant toughness. It's an unexpected gift of a book from one of America's most courageous young journalists.' (NPR.org)â€œWhat is most impressive about â€œBrain on Fireâ€ is that Cahalan has little recollection of her month of insanityâ€. Thanks partially to her talent as a journalist and to the fact that her parents kept journals, Cahalan was able to recapture her month, leaving no holes in the narrative.â€ (The Daily Texan) Ãœber den Autor und weitere Mitwirkende Susannah Cahalan is a news reporter at the New York Post whose award-winning work has also been featured in The New York Times. Brain on Fire PREFACE At first, thereâ€™s just darkness and silence. â€œAre my eyes open? Hello?â€ I canâ€™t tell if Iâ€™m moving my mouth or if thereâ€™s even anyone to ask. Itâ€™s too dark to see. I blink once, twice, three times. There is a dull foreboding in the pit of my stomach. That, I recognize. My thoughts translate only slowly into language, as if emerging from a pot of molasses. Word by word the questions come: Where am I? Why does my scalp itch? Where is everyone? Then the world around me comes gradually into view, beginning as a pinhole, its diameter steadily expanding. Objects emerge from the murk and sharpen into focus. After a moment I recognize them: TV, curtain, bed. I know immediately that I need to get out of here. I lurch forward, but something snaps against me. My fingers find a thick mesh vest at my waist holding me to the bed like â€œwhatâ€™s the word?â€straitjacket. The vest connects to two cold metal side rails. I wrap my hands around the rails and pull up, but again the straps dig into my chest, yielding only a few inches. Thereâ€™s an unopened window to my right that looks onto a street. Cars, yellow cars. Taxis. I am in New York. Home. Before the relief finishes washing over me, though, I see her. The purple lady. She is staring at me. â€œHelp!â€ I shout. Her expression never changes, as if I hadnâ€™t said a thing. I shove myself against the straps again. â€œDonâ€™t you go doing that,â€ she croons in a familiar Jamaican accent. â€œSybil?â€ But it couldnâ€™t be. Sybil was my childhood babysitter. I havenâ€™t seen her since I was a child. Why would she choose today to reenter my life? â€œSybil? Where am I?â€ â€œThe hospital. You better calm down.â€ Itâ€™s not Sybil. â€œIt hurts.â€ The purple lady moves closer, her breasts brushing against my face as she bends across me to unhook the restraints, starting on the right and moving to the left. With my arms free, I instinctually raise my right hand to scratch my head. But instead of hair and scalp, I find a cotton hat. I rip it off, suddenly angry, and raise both hands to inspect my head further. I feel rows and rows of plastic wires. I pluck one outâ€which makes my scalp stingâ€and lower it to eye level; itâ€™s pink. On my wrist is an orange plastic band. I squint, unable to focus on the words, but after a few seconds, the block letters sharpen: FLIGHT RISK. Brain on Fire CHAPTER 1 BEDBUG BLUES Maybe it all began with a bug bite, from a bedbug that didnâ€™t exist. One morning, Iâ€™d woken up to find two red dots on the main purplish-blue vein running down my left arm. It was early 2009, and New York City was awash in bedbug scares: they infested offices, clothing stores, movie theaters, and park benches. Though I wasnâ€™t naturally a worrier, my dreams had been occupied for two nights straight by finger-long bedbugs. It was a reasonable concern, though after carefully scouring the apartment, I couldnâ€™t find a single bug or any evidence of their presence. Except those two bites. I even called in an exterminator to check out my apartment, an overworked Hispanic man who combed the whole place, lifting up my sofa bed and shining a flashlight into places I had never before thought to clean. He proclaimed my studio bug free. That seemed unlikely, so I asked for a follow-up appointment for him to spray. To his credit, he urged me to wait before shelling out an astronomical sum to do battle against what he seemed to think was an imaginary infestation. But I pressed him to do it, convinced that my apartment, my bed, my body had been overrun by bugs. He agreed to return and exterminate. Concerned as I was, I tried to conceal my growing unease from my coworkers. Understandably, no one wanted to be associated with a person with a bedbug problem. So at work the following day, I walked as nonchalantly as possible through the newsroom of the New York Post to my cubicle. I was careful to conceal my bites and tried to appear casual, normal. Not that "normal" means a lot at the Post. Though it's notoriously obsessed with what's new, the Post is nearly as old as the nation itself. Established by Alexander Hamilton in 1801, it is the longest continually run newspaper in the country. In its first century alone, the paper crusaded for the abolition movement and helped promote the creation of Central Park. Today the newsroom itself is cavernous yet airless, filled with rows of open cubicles and a glut of filing cabinets packed with decades of unused, forgotten documents. The walls are freckled with clocks that don't run, dead flowers hung upside down to dry, a picture of a monkey riding a border collie, and a big foam Six Flags finger, all memorabilia from reporters' assignments. The PCs are ancient, the copy machines the size of small ponies. A small utility closet that once served as a smoking room now holds supplies, and is marked by a weathered sign warning that the smoking room no longer exists, as if someone might accidentally wander in for a cigarette among the monitors and video equipment. This has been my eccentric little world for the past seven years, since I started here as a seventeen-year-old intern. Especially around deadline, the room buzzes with activity—keyboards clacking, editors yelling, reporters cackling—the perfect stereotype of a tabloid newsroom. "Where's the fucking picture to go with this caption?" "How is it that he didn't know she was a prostitute?" "What color were the socks of the guy who jumped off the bridge?" It's like a bar without alcohol, filled with adrenaline-soaked news junkies. The cast of characters here is unique to the Post: the brightest headline writers in the business, the hardened newshounds hunting after exclusives, and type-A workaholics who possess the chameleon ability to either befriend or antagonize almost anyone. Still, on most days, the newsroom is subdued, as everyone silently combs through court documents, interviews sources, or reads newspapers. Often, like today, the newsroom is as quiet as a morgue. Heading toward my desk to start the day, I wove through the rows of cubicles marked by green Manhattan street signs: Liberty Street, Nassau Street, Pine Street, and William Street, throwbacks to a time when the Post was actually flanked by those downtown streets in its previous home at the South Street Seaport. My desk is at Pine Street. Amid the silence, I slid into my seat beside Angela, my closest friend at the paper, and gave her a tense smile. Trying not to let my question echo too loudly across the noiseless room, I asked, "You know anything about bedbug bites?" I often joked that if I ever had a daughter, I'd want her to be like Angela. In many ways, she is my newsroom hero. When I first met her, three years before, she was a soft-spoken, shy young woman from Queens, only a few years older than me. She had arrived at the Post from a small weekly paper and since then had matured under the pressure of a big-city tabloid into one of the Post's most talented reporters, churning out reams of our best stories. Most late Friday nights, you'd find Angela writing four stories on split screens simultaneously. I couldn't help but look up to her. Now I really needed her advice. Hearing that dreaded word, bedbugs, Angela scooted her chair away from mine. "Don't tell me you have them,..."
